Friendship Friends play an important part in our lives, and although we may take friendship for granted, we often don't clearly understand how we make we get on well with a number of people, we are usually friends with only a very few----for example, the average among students is about 6 per all the cases of friendly relationships, two people like one another and enjoy being beyond that, the degree of intimacy between them and the reasons for the shared interests vary we get to know people we take into account things like age, race, economic conditions, social position, and though the factors are not of prime importance, it is more difficult to get on with people when there is a marked difference in age and background.

Some friendly relationships can be kept on argument and discussion, but it is usual for close friends to have similar ideas and beliefs, to have attitudes and interests in common ---they often talk about "being on the same wavelength". It generally takes time to reach this the more intimately involved people become, the more they rely on one another. supporting and understanding of each other that results from shared experiences and emotions does em to create a powerful bond ,which can overcome differences in background ,and break
